Choosing a form tool: a decision checklist

Twelve questions to answer before you pick a form tool. Tick each one once you know the answer.

Form or project: _____ Date: _____

☐ 1. Who fills it in: colleagues or customers?
If customers: look for branding control and a custom look.
Your answer:

☐ 2. How many responses could one busy month bring?
Check each plan's monthly cap and what happens when you hit it.
Your answer:

☐ 3. Do respondents need to upload files?
If yes: check whether they must sign in to upload, and where the files are stored.
Your answer:

☐ 4. Do you need one question at a time, or a page you scroll?
Try both layouts on a phone with a real form before you pick.
Your answer:

☐ 5. Does one answer need to change the next question?
If yes: check which question types can branch, and on which plan.
Your answer:

☐ 6. Do you need to take a payment?
If yes: check which payment provider it uses and which plan includes payments.
Your answer:

☐ 7. Where must the answers end up?
Sheets, Slack, a CRM: check for native integrations before you count on a third-party connector.
Your answer:

☐ 8. Who on your team needs access, and how is that priced?
Check how many users each plan includes and the cost of each extra seat.
Your answer:

☐ 9. Do you need your own domain or to remove the tool's branding?
If yes: check which plan allows it. It is often a higher plan.
Your answer:

☐ 10. Will you grade quizzes?

If yes: look for scoring, answer keys and showing results to the respondent.

Your answer:

☐ 11. What does the plan cost per month and per year at the volume you expect?

Price the plan that fits your busy month, not your quiet one. Compare monthly and yearly billing.

Your answer:

☐ 12. How easy is it to move your forms and responses out later?

Look for a CSV export of responses and a way to copy or rebuild your forms elsewhere.
